

Iress launches industry-wide coronavirus support and resource hub

Iress has today announced the launch of a new hub to provide free technology-related information and support for the financial services industry as it adjusts to new ways of working.

Visitors can access a range of guidance and tools including information on how to continue to support clients while working remotely as well as how to access information securely. This advice is available to all, not just Iress clients.

Iress' CEO, Andrew Walsh, said: "In the past month, financial services businesses have had to adapt suddenly - with normal ways of working and interacting breaking down and the need for digital interaction rapidly accelerating.

"Sound management and guidance by financial professionals is one of the ways society will navigate this crisis. It's our job to support and assist the financial community to do that through technology.

"Resources and information covers practical ways businesses can stay connected to clients and their people while working from home as well as increased information on how to get the most from our software and services."
